Instructions
Give Your Assistant a Clear Job

Like briefing a new colleague: define the job and its limits.

Instructions = The job brief

They tell the agent what to do

EXERCISE 1

Define the Job Before Asking for Results

Role and task

What should the assistant help with?

Language and format

How should the answer be presented?

Boundaries

What must it avoid or ask about?

> Clear Instructions make the expected behavior easier to test.

A Clear Format Makes Answers Easier to Check

Request and facts

Separate what is wanted from what is known.

Missing information

Keep unknowns visible.

Follow-up questions

Ask for details needed to continue.

> A structured brief helps a reviewer spot gaps.

EXERCISE 2

Check the Answer Against Its Source

Find the supporting passage

Open the cited source or named document.

Compare the meaning

Does the passage support this specific claim?

Check the case facts

Do not fill missing case details from a general guide.

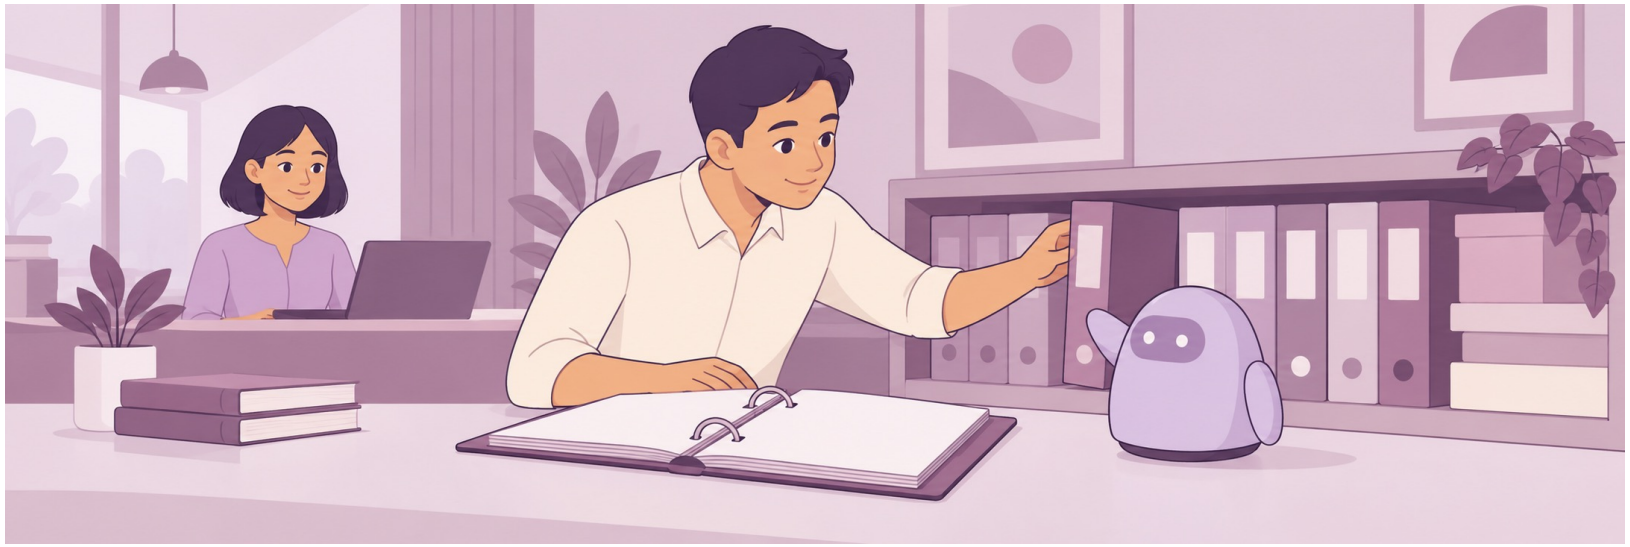

> A citation helps you check an answer; it does not prove every claim.

EXERCISE 3

Two Inputs, Two Different Jobs

CaseNotes

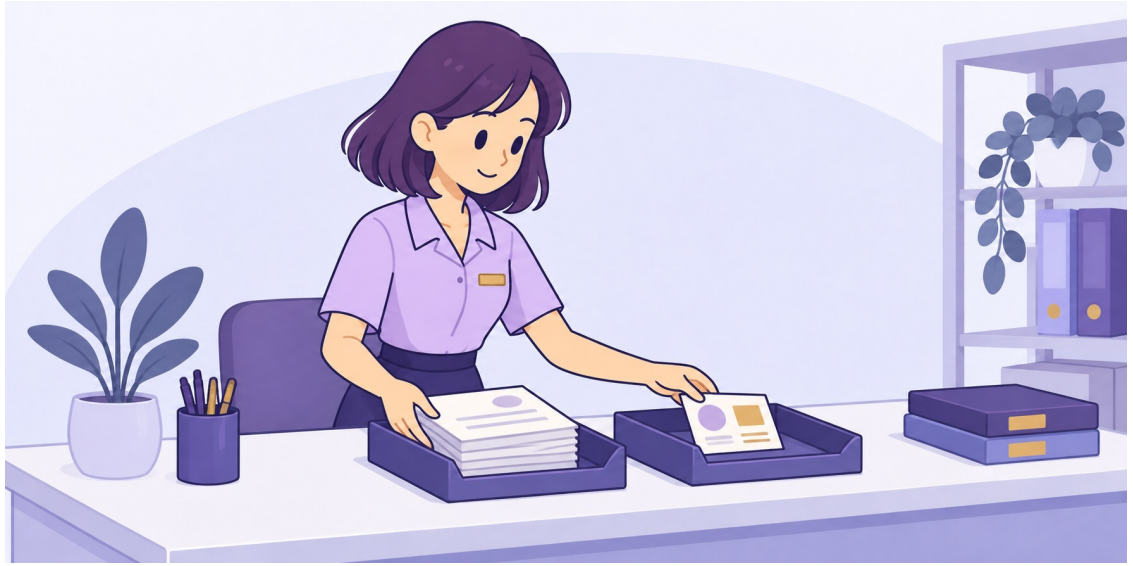

The source content to summarize.

BriefStyle

The requested style: Concise or Detailed.

One factual case

A longer format must not introduce new facts.

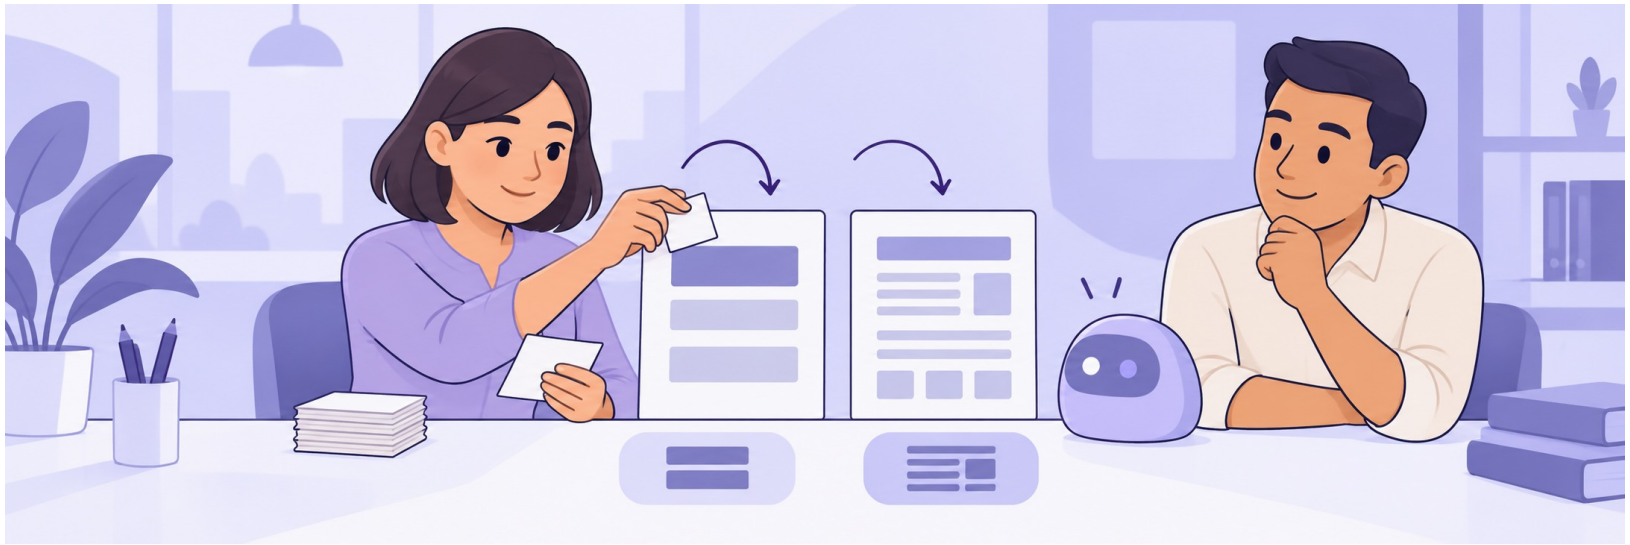

> Change the level of detail while preserving the facts.

EXERCISE 5

One Question, Two Paths

Has the CASE-201 brief been fact-checked?

Reviewed

Check facts and destination before any send

Needs changes

Revise the brief, then check again

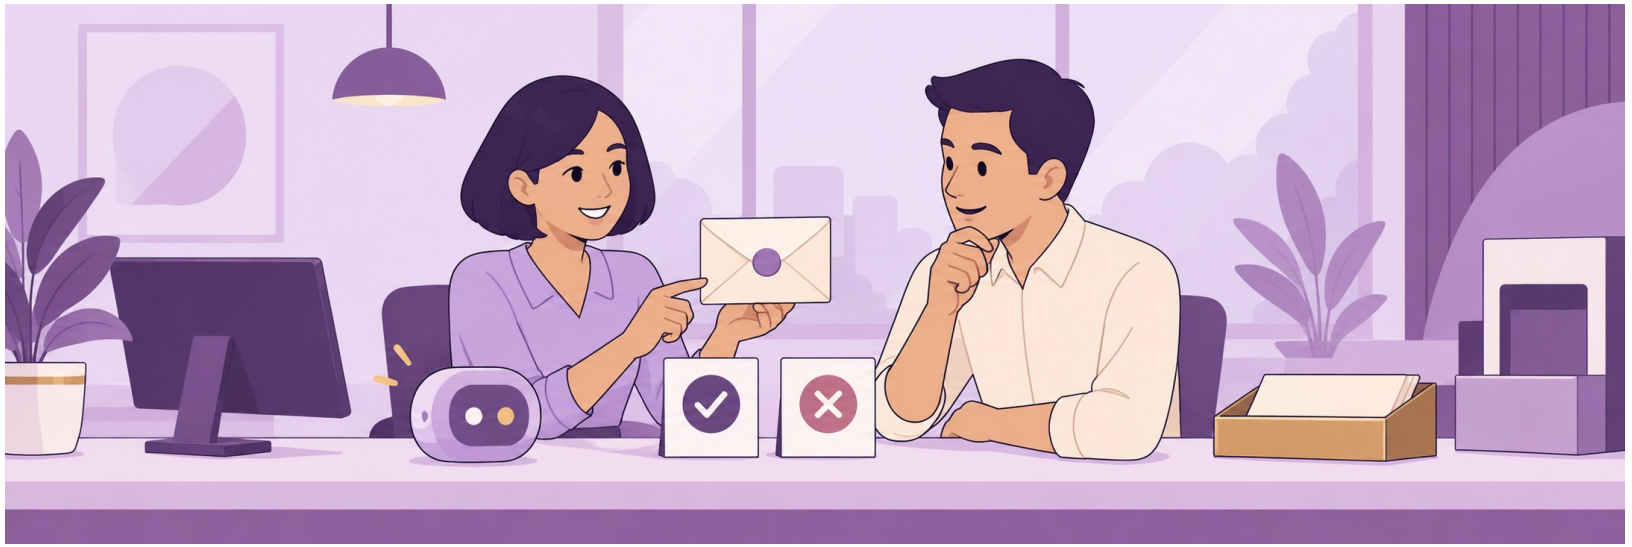

> Each choice leads to its own guidance message.

REVIEW

Test More Than the Happy Path

Normal request

Does the expected result appear?

Missing or unclear input

Does the Agent ask instead of guessing?

Sending behavior

Does the Agent wait for confirmation and report the actual result?

> Use the optional team test log to capture scenarios and observed results.
